The Silver Token.

There, Tina!

Mr. Bruce Medway triumphantly held up two semi-circles of silver in the air, so that they might be sure to make a sufficient impression on Ernestine Cady's blue eyes, and smiled with the exultant satisfaction of one who feels that he has accomplished his mission.

He was a bright, earnest looking young fellow, with gray-brown eyes, and a square, firm mouth—not handsome, but very manly; and as he sat there on the green woodland bank, with the hair thrown back from his broad forehead, and the sunshine mirrored in his eyes, you felt instinctively that he was one who would make his way in the world, no matter what obstacles might intervene.

Ernestine Cady stood leaning against the gnarled, mossy trunk of an immense chestnut tree, with her little feet half buried in plumes of fallen ferns—rare pictures in blue muslin and fluttering azure ribbons. She was very pretty, with the delicate freshness of a flower—a flower that winds and frost have never touched.

"Didnt I tell you I should do it this?"

Ernestine took up the little file that lay on the bank.

"Nothing is impossible," continued Bruce, sententiously, as he passed a bit of blue ribbon through a hole in the broken piece of silver. "Will you let me tie it round your neck, Tina?"

"What for?" But she stopped her pretty head as she spoke, and let him tie the knot beneath a cluster of pale gold ears.

"And I shall wear the other next to my heart. They are amulets, Tina—charms, if you choose so to name them; that always carries my allegiances with it. Tina, it ever my cloud comes between us—if ever we are separated?"

"Bruce!"

"Such things have happened, dearest; but, nevertheless, in any event, this broken coin-shall be taken and a summons to me, wherever I may be—whatever fate may have in store. Don't look so grave, my little blue bird. Is it so very wrong to mingle a bit of romance in our everyday life? Where are your flowers?—Was there anything wrong in this plain found?"

"I was not pleased to hear you say that."

"She will be home soon, brother," said Tina. "Only see what a basketfull of cranberries I have gathered out in the swamps! This will make the barrelful, and Mr. Signet has promised to send it to New York with me. Don't they look like red jewels, father? And the money will buy you nice things."

"He seemed kindly."

"I think it had better happen to this girl in a new dress. Shall I help to make them over?"

"I had rather do it myself, and you must try and sleep awhile."

Half an hour later Tina came through the room with a basket slung over her shoulder, and a smiling, gay look in her eyes.

"You are not going out again, my child?"

"Only up to the cranberry swamp, father, it is dark now. I—I leave just something."
